Explanations
Difficulty categories	Exit	Defined by how solid your exits and your early sub-terminal flying skills have to be (approx. first 6s). For example, a cliff might be rated black because it requires a very strong push to clear the first underhung (positive) part (e.g. High Ultimate). It might also be rated black because of a short rockdrop, which does not forgive a prolonged head-low position, unintentional flip or weak sub-terminal flying skills (e.g. Jungfrau - Melchstuhl). This rating does NOT take into account how difficult the access to the spot is.
	Freefall	Defined by how good your late sub-terminal and terminal flying skills have to be (roughly after 6s) in order to have a safe horizontal distance from the mountain all the way until pull time.
	Landing	Defined by how difficult the landing is, taking aspects such as landing area size, obstacles or strong winds into account.
	Overall	Defined by the most difficult rating for either exit, freefall or landing.
Difficulty levels		Blue: Intermediate , Red: Advanced , Black: Expert . A blue rating does not imply a beginner jump! The whole Lauterbrunnen Valley is NOT a beginner's place for terminal cliff jumps. All jumps in the valley require very solid skydive experience and good tracking skills. The ratings should be understood as a general recommendation, derived from the opinions of various very experienced jumpers and sadly from numerous accidents that have occurred in the valley. Still, every basejumper should also take into account his or her individual strengths and weaknesses, and thoroughly assess every jump on his own.
